PILOT BESSIE COLEMAN PASSES AWAY

Born in 1892, Bessie Coleman became the first Black woman to gain an international permit to fly. After Coleman was turned away from a number of flight schools in the U.S. because of her race and gender, she traveled to Paris in 1920 to receive her pilot's license. She became an international sensation and returned to the States to become a stunt pilot. Her lifelong dream of opening a flying school to train future Black aviators was never realized. She passed away in 1926 during an aerial show rehearsal at 34 years old.

Knitting for Healing, One Stitch at a Time

When Mary Mwangi got her cancer diagnosis, she imagined death would follow shortly. She did not expect that her hobby of knitting, which she took up while recovering, would affect the lives of thousands of breast cancer survivors.

She now makes knitted prostheses for other breast cancer survivors in Kenya who have had an entire breast removed, known as a mastectomy, without the reconstructive surgery common in higher-income countries.

Women say the affordable prostheses are a relief in Kenya where, as in most countries, breast cancer is the most diagnosed cancer among women. On average, 6,000 cases are diagnosed annually in Kenya, where 40% of the population lives below the poverty line.

'MY DIGNITY WAS RESTORED'

Mwangi began in 2017 by knitting hats and scarves, then met a woman who was knitting a prosthesis.

Now, in her shared tailor shop in Thika, outside the capital of Nairobi, Mwangi shares her knowledge with other women, calling her group the New Dawn Cancer Warriors. Some make money from the art, while others use it as an outlet whenever they are overwhelmed by the grief of losing a breast.

"Knitting takes you through a process of healing. Once you are not thinking about your disease, you are positive and that positive mind helps you, because healing starts from your mind," she said.

For Nancy Waithera, a high school science teacher, meeting Mwangi before her surgery aided her recovery as she bought the prosthesis and started to picture life without one breast.

When she was diagnosed with breast cancer, "everything turned dark." Her husband had recently died, and the diagnosis crushed her further. But her meeting with Mwangi restored hope, and after surgery she looked forward to her incision healing so she could try on the knitted prosthesis.

On the first day of wearing it, when she was going to church, "I felt like Nancy had come back," she said. "My ego was restored. My dignity was restored."

FILLING A BRA WITH CLOTHING

Cancer remains a huge burden in developing countries like Kenya due to the high cost of treatment. Just over 50% of breast cancer patients in Kenya present with an advanced stage of the disease at diagnosis, according to the health ministry, which is working on standardizing early detection.

Mwangi's knitted prostheses cost $10 per breast, or one-sixth of the price of silicone ones in Kenya. Her group of women knit and sell them to organizations that donate to cancer survivors who cannot afford to buy them. Together, they have sold more than 600 pieces in the last three years.

The yarn-knitted prostheses are filled with the kind of fiber used in pillows. Women said it feels gentle on their skin. Hannah Mugo, a housewife and mother, said she was lucky to upgrade from filling her bra with clothes, which left her looking rather unbalanced, to donning a knitted prosthesis filled with fiber that boosted her confidence.

"I used to stay indoors because I didn't want people to label me as the 'woman with one breast,'" Mugo said. She met Mwangi and learned how to knit, not just for herself but for sale as well.

'THERE IS LIFE AFTER CANCER'

Experts say hobbies and support groups play a critical role in healing and recovery for cancer patients. Breast cancer survivor Eglah Wambui, who also knits with Mwangi, recalled that a woman she met during her treatment killed herself due to what doctors said was depression.

"Knitting is therapeutic and helps take away my thoughts," said the mother of two.

Surgeon Daniel Ojuka, who has seen some of the donated prostheses at the Kenyatta National Hospital cancer treatment center, said having a plan for life after surgery and a supportive community makes recovery "significantly easier."

Even though surgeons prepare patients to wake up after surgery with a flat chest, the loss is deeply affecting, he said. He has watched patients weep after waking. For Mwangi, cancer no longer feels like a death sentence. She said she is determined to train more women to knit the prostheses while keeping their hope alive.

"There is life after cancer, and cancer is not a death sentence, because I'm a living testimony," she said.

Composer of Iconic 'Lion King' Chant Sues Over 'Circle of Life' Translation

A Grammy-award winning South African composer who wrote and performed the iconic opening chant in "Circle of Life" for Disney's "The Lion King" movies is suing a comedian for allegedly damaging his reputation by intentionally misrepresenting the song's meaning on a podcast and in his stand-up routine.

Lebahang Morake's lawsuit accuses Zimbabwean comedian Learnmore Mwanenyeka, known as Learnmore Jonasi, of intentionally mistranslating the chant, which launches the 1994 Disney movie and is central to staged versions as well as Disney's 2019 remake. The dispute, which has gone viral as the two men challenge each other on social media, stems from statements Jonasi made in his stand-up routines and in a recent podcast interview, where he translated the song's lyrics from Zulu and Xhosa, two of South Africa's 12 national languages.

The lawsuit accuses Jonasi of intentionally mocking "the chant's cultural significance with exaggerated imitations." Disney's official translation of the opening phrase "Nants'ingonyama bagithi Baba" is "All hail the king, we all bow in the presence of the king." "Hay! baba, sizongqoba," the chant continues. It translates to "Through you we will emerge victoriously," according to Morake.

In the episode of One54 cited in the lawsuit, the podcast's Nigerian hosts initially sing the chant with incoherent and incorrect words. Jonasi corrects them, and says "That's not how you sing it, don't mess up our language like that." Jonasi then sings the correct lyrics in Zulu. When asked, he says they translate to: "Look, there's a lion. Oh my god." The hosts burst out laughing, saying that they had previously thought the chant was something more "beautiful and majestic."

"Circle of Life," with music by Elton John and English-language lyrics by Tim Rice, came up in the broader context of Jonasi's critique of "The Lion King" franchise as profiting off of simplistic narratives about the African continent for non-African audiences.

These successes should be celebrated, not dismissed.

This school, built into a $33 million campus, represents both investment and potential. However, infrastructure alone does not educate students—people do. Leadership matters. It is time to ensure that those in positions of authority are equipped, compassionate, and committed to advancing equitable, high-quality education for all students.

San Diego Unified School District must take a closer look. Ignoring these issues does a disservice to students, educators, and families alike. Our community deserves transparency, accountability, and leadership that prioritizes the well-being and success of every scholar.

empowerment, values, purpose, and belonging for students in grades 6 through 8.

"Our goal is to be able to introduce middle school students to college-going behaviors and college-going opportunities," said Dr. Leilah Kirkendoll. Keynote speaker and high school senior Julian Frederick, also known as the Step Stool Chef, taught students the key ingredients to lead through a live cooking demonstration featuring his "leadership burger."

Following Frederick's remarks, students broke into groups and rotated through a variety of breakout sessions. Workshop topics included developing leadership potential, strengthening their school community, and learning what greatness means. The summit was sponsored by SDCOE with support from the ANEW Project and the Superintendent's Black Advisory.
